Editorial Goals

- To present both authors and their work in the best possible light, maximizing credibility with professional document preparation and presentation.
- To eliminate unnecessary stress throughout graduate programs and ongoing projects by providing a supportive partnership allowing authors to concentrate on content-related issues and developing expertise in their chosen disciplines.
- To save valuable time and finances as graduate programs and individual projects are completed far sooner, eliminating multiple revisions.
- To create a more effective and productive student-advisor relationship with the submittal of clean, edited drafts, allowing advisors to offer content guidance far more expediently as they are relieved of “weeding through” copyediting issues and writing-style requirements. The same higher level relationship of respect is achieved between author and publisher with later journal or book editing.
- To improve university program-completion rates by eliminating the frustration and discouragement often associated with attempting all aspects alone. Authors of research papers, journal articles, and books are also assured of project completion as they reap the same benefits of the editorial partnership.
- To facilitate learning as all noncontent editing is reviewed and approved by authors prior to input and final document preparation.

A Streamlined Process

- Documents are submitted for edit via e-mail along with university/publisher guidelines.
- The ink editorial markup is provided for author review and any desired adjustments to the proposed edits prior to final input. Any editorial queries are also placed directly on the same hard-copy markup and answered on the same markup.
- The markup is returned to the editor and a high-quality, ready-to-submit print is subsequently delivered via e-mail, ready for university/publisher submittal.
- An online process is also available for overseas clients with unusual limitations, circumstances, or timelines.

Focus of the Edit

- Ensured adherence to the American Psychological Association (APA) required writing style.
- Ensured adherence to any existing supplemental guidelines documented by the school or publisher.
- Clean punctuation and grammar.
- Smooth, clear, and succinct sentence structure.
- Professional and scholarly terminology.

Content is the responsibility of the author and, with submittal of drafts edited for the above detail, graduate students will glean valuable content guidance from their advisors in a far more effective manner; authors of grant proposals will reap greater, more timely funding success; and journal and book authors will find their work far more readily accepted within the publishing realm.

Cost-Effective Support

- Both stages of the editorial process, through to final submittal copy, are offered at the minimum rate charged for professional editing in the interest of supporting graduate students, researchers, and independent authors. An advance estimate is provided upon receipt of an estimated page count via the Request Estimate page of the Web site.

A Career Resource

- This editorial partnership continues to work for you throughout your career. The same streamlined process is implemented with all types of literary work from the graduate program through future grant proposals, journal articles, scientific papers or research reports, and/or book writing.

About the Editor

- With over 30 years corporate background, supporting the top-echelon executives in some of the largest corporations in our country, Jill brings unique benefits to her clients. This broad experience not only allows her to conduct unusually effective editorial support, but within all disciplines. Although text content is not involved in the edit, her expertise and extensive background within various industries only serve to further benefit the individuals, universities, and journals she supports.
- In addition to the over 800 graduate students who have successfully submitted dissertations/theses the first time through graduate offices across the country with her support, Jill has also served as a freelance editor for Sage Publications, editing entire journals for this major publisher. She has also supported a large group of researchers within the famous Karolinska Institute in Sweden to assist them in gaining greater publication success in this country and wider recognition of their important work, as well as researchers in Canada, Australia, Korea, and many other areas across the globe.
- Jill supports graduate students who are active-duty military across the globe. She also works with book authors, editing both original manuscripts and doctoral dissertations transformed into book copy, ensuring adherence to required publisher guidelines.
- This editor offers a strong added expertise in polishing documents created by writers for whom English is a second language. Jill has also supported many authors challenged with dyslexia, ADD, ADHD, and other unique learning “hurdles” through their doctoral programs and on to book publication and careers in high-level academic and corporate positions.
